MAY YOUR NAME BE INSCRIBED IN THE BOOK OF LIFE

BY JOE NAIMAN & STEVEN SAINT

Three books are opened on Rosh Ha-Shanah: one for the completely righteous, one for the completely wicked and one for the average persons. The completely righteous are immediately inscribed in the book of life. The completely wicked are immediately inscribed in the book of death. The average persons are kept in suspension from Rosh Ha-Shanah to the Day of Atonement. If they deserve well, they are inscribed in the book of life; if they do not deserve well, they are inscribed in the book of death.

*The Talmud
Rosh Ha-Shanah 16b*

Tomorrow is the birthday of the world. Tomorrow, all the world will be judged. Jewish tradition also says the days to be inscribed in the Book of Life grow short.

These are the "Days of Awe," the beginning of the year 5757.

Jewish New Year (in Hebrew, "Rosh Ha-Shanah") is not a time for noise, all-night parties and wild abandon. Not with the fate of the coming year hanging in the balance, those heavenly scrolls about to be sealed. It is supposed to be a time, rather, for serious soul-searching and making amends.

There isn't really any equivalent in Hebrew for the English word, "sin." The closest is probably the word, "het," which connotes "missing the mark." That is why Yom Kippur, the High Holy Day which ends the 10-day penitential period following Rosh Ha-Shanah, is often translated the "Day of Purification" as well as the "Day of Atonement." Resolving to hit the mark is as important as holding a chicken over your head.

Moses himself had to learn this lesson. The Bible says Moses went up Mount Sinai to receive the Law on two stone tablets. He destroyed these tablets in a fit of rage, seeing the Israelites paying homage to a Golden Calf upon his return. Jewish legend has it that Moses was commanded by the Most High to go back up the mountain, stay in a cave for 40 days and carve out a new set.

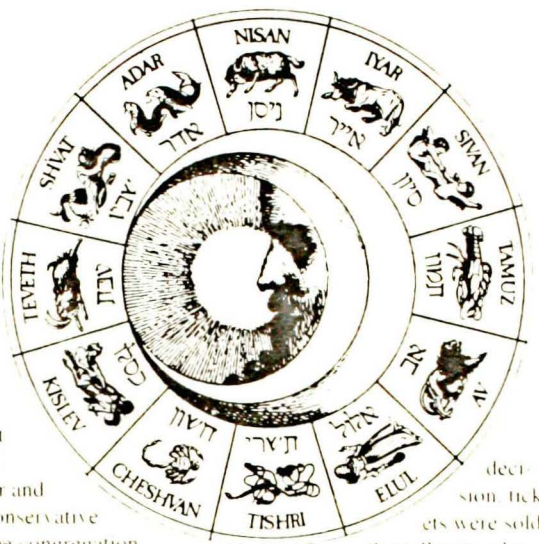

Upon completing the new tablets, Moses was directed to place the Ten Commandments in a holy ark along with the broken fragments of the original tablets. Moses' mistakes were as important as his successes.

Last Saturday, just before midnight, members of the Beth Tefilah congregation gathered for a selichot service. Selichot ("pardon us") can be described as begging God for mercy. The observance consists of a combination of praise of God and acknowledgment of transgressions.

Selichot is the final phase of preparation for the New Year, a chance for Jews to petition God to be placed in the Book of Life for agogues on the periphery of East County. Like Tifereth Israel near Cowles Mountain, it is on the La Mesa border and practices Conservative Judaism. The congregation has been without a rabbi for a decision tickets were sold the following day.

Gerstein doesn't resort to such tactics. He prefaced the service with a lecture on selichot, comparing the prayers to writing a letter to God, asking God to give a sinner another chance to do right.

Most people of any faith would agree that such a request is worth being up in the middle of the night.

Rabbi Gerstein was born the day after Rosh Ha-Shanah in 1940, aboard a boat. His parents had been living in Palestine (pre-1948 Israel), but were expelled by the British.

The boat broke the German blockade and docked in Newark, New Jersey, after Gerstein's birth. Gerstein's family returned to Palestine in 1945, staying until 1951. During this time, the state of Israel was created. Gerstein remembers that his father would put in a day of work and then go off to guard duty, seeing the future rabbi for only a couple of hours a day while maintaining a vigil against those who would deny a Jewish state.

The family moved back to America — to Chicago — when Rabbi Gerstein was 11. He attended Roosevelt University in Chicago and went to Israel, studying in the seminary from 1962 to 1965, before being ordained in the Holy Land.

Coming to East County is a new challenge. Beth Tefilah's previous rabbi, Michael Manson, left a year and a half ago to become the chaplain for the Veterans Administration Hospital in Los Angeles. Gerstein was formally welcomed on Aug. 25 with a Western Night party.

He said he hopes that a small congregation (Mogen David had 850 families, Beth Tefilah has 165 "membership units") will give him the chance to have an impact and reach out to the Jewish community that is not participating.

"This is a community synagogue which is in an area close to San Diego State University, and the challenge is to create programming that will draw from a variety of areas because we're so freeway close," said Gerstein. "We're interested in meeting the needs of a variety of Jewish families."

One of his ideas is holding an "early Sabbath" service, geared towards families with children under the age of 7, which will begin at 6:30 p.m. and last about a half-hour. He would also like to see the older children take part in leading the Saturday morning services.

"I like having kids lead services," Gerstein said. "If the kids do it and enjoy it, they bring their families."

Gerstein also plans to lead an adult discussion group which will meet twice a month. The congregation seems warm to Gerstein's goal of bringing usable information and insight to issues of living a Jewish life in 21st-century America. His first session, held prior to selichot, was entitled "Letters to God."

"I have been delighted with the response, the warmth of the response of my suggestions for programming," he said.

The Sefer HaChinuch says that Rosh Ha-Shanah is the day on which the whole world is judged. Each individual creature is judged as an individual. This judging has been compared to sheep passing in single file under the watchful eye of the shepherd. Just as each sheep is scrutinized alone, separate from the flock, so too are we judged on Rosh Ha-Shanah as individuals, separate from everyone else.

Why do we have a day of judgment? The Sefer HaChinuch explains further that this holiday on which we are judged is truly a kindness of God. God, because we have this yearly holiday, reviews our deeds yearly, thereby preventing our sins from amassing. As we only have to deal with our sins one year at a time, there is still room for repentance and atonement.

Furthermore, as God judges us with kindness, if there are few sins, they are pardoned. If there are sins for which punishment is needed to cleanse the person, the punishment is exacted in small doses, bit by bit. If the accounting of our deeds did not take place on a yearly basis, our sins would accumulate until the point that God would decide to end the existence of the world, because of all the evil and disregarding of His words.

Prior to the prayer service, the blue covers of the Torah scrolls were replaced with white covers, symbolic of purity and light. The white covers will remain on the scrolls until Simchat Torah, the 23rd day of the New Year, at which time the last chapter of the Torah is read and the scrolls re-wound for the reading of the beginning section the following Sabbath.

The lecterns were also covered with a white cloth. Beginning at 11:30 p.m., members of the congregation shared in leading the prayers. The service lasted about 45 minutes.

Jewish holidays always begin at sundown, but selichot services start close to midnight. Because this is a time to ask for God's mercy, Jews need to show some sacrifice. Even so, adrenaline seemed to negate the effects of fatigue during the changing of the Torah covers — in the event that a Torah scroll is dropped, all who are present must fast from sunrise to sunset for the next 40 days.

Beth Tefilah is one of five synagogues on the periphery of East County. Like Tifereth Israel near Cowles Mountain, it is on the La Mesa border and practices Conservative Judaism. The congregation has been without a rabbi for a year and a half. The arrival of Rabbi Akiva Gerstein last month makes this not only the birthday of the world, but a new chapter for Beth Tefilah.

Gerstein, one of three rabbis guiding the 850-family Mogen David congregation in West Los Angeles, said that selichot has had a less than purifying purpose in some congregations. The service has been used to promote a visiting cantor and sell tickets for the high holiday services.

Selling tickets to High Holy Day services is the primary fundraiser for many a synagogue, and congregations have competed for attendance by boasting a cantor from out of town, sometimes as far away as Israel, Europe, Mexico City or other places with a significant Jewish population. In cities with more than one synagogue (and by Jewish tradition towns, must have at least two synagogues to give worshippers a choice), the chance to hear a cantor during selichot clinched the decision of which synagogue to attend during the High Holy Day services. For those who made the

Personal comments of Mayor Mary Sessom

I think that I shall never see A billboard lovely as a tree. indeed, unless the billboards fall I'll never see a tree at all.

Ogden Nash, "Song of the Open Road"

Freeway and highway construction often bring with it dirt, noise and the death of trees. The freeways and highways themselves bring, among other things, billboards. These two things had been uppermost in my mind whenever I thought about SR 125, scheduled to disrupt the eastern side of Lemon Grove for the next four years. However, a tree planting ceremony I participated in Thursday assured me that SR 125 will be bringing more than just billboards, it will be bringing trees.

Three thousand trees to be exact. That is the number of trees that are projected to be planted by Caltrans as a mitigation measure for the destruction brought by the construction of SR 125. SANDAG developed a program called Trees 2,000. Trees 2,000 is a partnership of local government, community residents and business people. This partnership will plant 2,000 trees by the year 2000. The plantings will create an urban forest along the new stretch of highway.

Caltrans will plant and maintain 1,000 trees in the right of way for SR 125. Two thousand trees will be planted in Lemon Grove and the community of Spring Valley by private landowners and businesses. Caltrans will maintain all the trees until 2001. The trees will then be turned over to the community.

Lemon Grove residents who live in the "viewshed" have received applications and adoption agreements for their tree trees. The City of Lemon Grove and the Lemon Grove School District have also committed to adopting trees. A community informational meeting regarding the tree planting program is to be held on Thursday, September 26, 6:30p.m., at Lemon Grove Middle School.

Hopefully, everyone eligible for a tree will adopt one. For those who don't live in the "viewshed" area, the City welcomes your suggestions regarding the placement of our trees. Let the whole City get on board in some way with Trees 2,000. "He that plants trees, loves others besides himself" (Thomas Fuller, Gnomologia). That is the spirit of Lemon Grove.

College Notes

With election year politics and promises over federal student grant approvals, direct government student loans, tax credits and changes in college financial aid guidelines, many students are finding it difficult to identify and understand their financial aid options. Unfortunately, many students are missing out on receiving financial assistance that is available to them.

Students taking the traditional path of relying on federal, state and institutional financial aid and loans are becoming frustrated as they discover they can't afford to pay the increasing dollars they are asked to contribute each year. These extra payments are straining family budgets and assets as many families try to fund schooling through burdensome debt.

Yet, unknown to many people, there are over 375,000 non-government scholarship and grant sources available which do not have to be paid back. More than 80 percent of these scholarships do not depend on family need or exceptional grades but are awarded based on factors such as the student's interests, hobbies, academic focus, age, heritage or parent's work or military service.

Remarkably, according to the National Commission on Student Financial Aid, over $6 billion of assistance goes uncollected each year simply because students are not aware of it and do not apply for it. Now, through the resources of the National Academic Funding Advisory (NAFA), an updated publication for 1996 is available which spells out academic funding guidelines, steps students through the maze of the financial aid process and shows what's needed to secure scholarship assistance.

For information on how to receive academic funding and scholarships send a No. 10 self-addressed, double stamped business envelope plus $2 to cover handling to NAFA, 815 Middle St., Dept. A7, Portsmouth, N.H. 03801.

Grossmont prof writes the book on Web

by Cheryl Winslow

Grossmont College professor and local author James Ray Musgrave will be discussing his book, Digital Scribe, A Writer's Guide to Electronic Media, from 7 - 8 p.m. today at Barnes & Noble in Grossmont Center.

Musgrave has a master's degree in English and creative writing and has spent 15 years as a writing consultant to corporations. He has taught the writing of business letters and reports to those in the engineering and technological fields. According to Musgrave, his new book is a resource for computer phobics and web surfers alike.

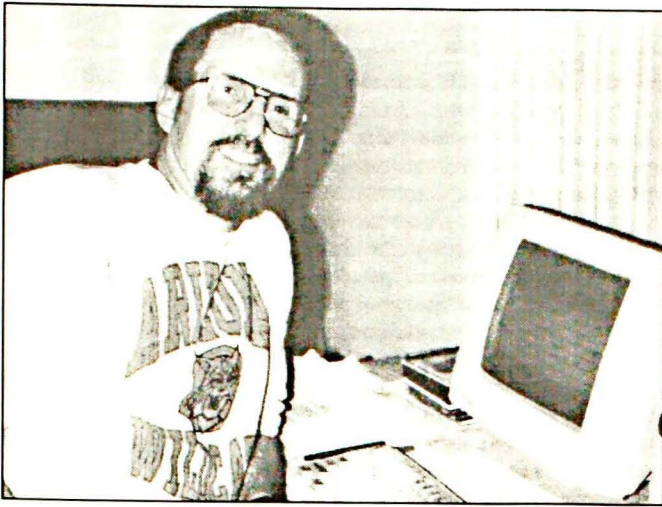

"I wrote the book in a friendly style, trying to get students to feel good about themselves as writers and as future multimedia developers," Musgrave says.

If you are a budding writer who is interested in finding out more about publishing opportunities on the Internet, Musgrave will guide you through the ins and outs of technical document writing, home page writing, self-publishing (your own book or literary magazine), and free-lance magazine writing. There is a whole new market in books and periodicals published entirely on the Net. Musgrave claims that this a great way to gain literary fame, fast.

"The Internet helps a lot of young people get famous, simply because people are interested in what you have to say," he remarked. After selling your book or story successfully on the Internet, you can often get it published off-line at a publishing house, going "through the back door."

Musgrave says Digital Scribe is not just a resource for writers, but also for those who consider themselves great with the technological aspect of the Net. The techie crowd may know their way around the superhighway, but also want to improve their writing skills in order to stay on the cutting edge of communication. Interactive multimedia, a combination of text, graphics, sound, and video, is where it's at, according to the author.

You'll find multimedia on the Internet in a variety of forms: magazines, home pages, books, and CD-ROMs, to name a few. The world of interactive multimedia is open to people with both technical and artistic skills. Writing a multimedia home page, for example, requires anticipating how the users will utilize all of their senses while surveying the final product.

James Ray Musgrave, author of Digital Scribe, and his computer are inseparable as they help the reader negotiate the Web.

Musgrave gets both creative and linear thinkers into the multimedia game by a variety of means. Techies can practice their creative, sensory thinking skills through a mind exercise called "clustering," in which they brainstorm thoughts and images which relate to a given phrase, such as "digital scribe." "Clustering" is a technique that Musgrave has utilized for years in his Grossmont College English classes, as well as in writing consulting work. When he worked with engineers, it was called "mind mapping."

The writer types are guided through the technical jargon by Musgrave and introduced to the most use- friendly software programs, as well as the need-to-know computer lingo for best communication with other surfers on the Net. Budding authors will find the publisher/agent address labels handy, as well.

Musgrave became computer literate rather late in his career, but once he discovered multimedia programs, he was hooked.

"I got obsessed the way I do with some projects," Musgrave says. "I learned pretty quickly. I got online, I got an account, and the rest was history."

Being around teaching in one form or another all of his life, the author felt the need to help his students become empowered in their use of the information highway.

Helix agrees to protect plants

To the mountain recreation seekers, anglers and hikers at Lake Cuyamaca, it looks like it usually does, inviting. To the Helix Water District customers who benefit from the "free" water, it is business as usual. But to the participants from six agencies who have been working cooperatively for the past two years, when they look at the area surrounding Lake Cuyamaca, this is the look of success.

A historic agreement known as the "Conservation Agreement for the Preservation of Cuyamaca Lake downingia (Downingia Concolor var. brevior), Parish's meadowfoam (Limnanthes gracilis var. parishii), and Cuyamaca larkspur (Delphinium hesperium ssp. cuyamaca)" provides for protection equal to or greater than that provided by the Endangered Species Act.

And it provides the protection before there is a serious depletion of the plants.

The agreement is the product of two years of cooperative effort between Helix Water District, Lake Cuyamaca Recreation and Park District, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, U.S. Forest Service, California Department of Fish and Game, and the California Department of Parks and Recreation. It represents a unique opportunity to protect and preserve sensitive species and makes the Aug. 4, 1994, proposed listing of Cuyamaca Lake downingia and Parish's meadowfoam as endangered and threatened species unnecessary. All three plants have their greatest population in and around the montane (moist, mountain) meadows of Lake Cuyamaca.

PG Perspectives

by Phillip Giannangeli

I guess I'd better fess up as well. Clinton said he did it. Didn't inhale, though. Gingrich and Gore admitted using too, infrequently they insist. Now add Susan Molinari to the list. She said she experimented with it during her college days in the 1980's. All these outstanding folks have now admitted they did something in their college years which, depending on how you want to characterize it, was either naughty or illegal. So, I guess it's my turn to acknowledge the truth like all the rest. I too experimented in college with a mood altering drug. And, I'm still doing it!

There, it's finally out in the open. Phew, do I feel better now. I want to make it clear that I didn't experiment with pot, marijuana, hemp, weed or whatever you want to call it. No, I experimented with a mood elevator just as potent, more available, easier to get on the streets, and potentially just as harmful in the long run. I think the reason more people weren't aware of its potency and the chaos it could cause was that the late J. Edgar Hoover tried to hush it up so we wouldn't become a nation of junkies.

But now, my story can be told. A few weeks ago, The San Diego Union-Tribune headlined a story that allows me to admit that I USED CHOCOLATE IN COLLEGE. That's right, mood-altering chocolate. Not that sissy white chocolate either. I was into the hard, dark stuff, but I did avoid getting hooked on crunchies.

No more half-truths or denials for me. I wasn't just a college-punk casual user; I was hooked like an about-to-be-landed mackerel. And I used a lot. I started my experimentation way before college and to be completely honest, I'm still a hard core dark-chocolate junkie.

All those other "experimenters" claim they only experimented back in their college days. They preach today's mantra of a drug free society and with the appropriate amount of chagrin, they now see the error of their youthful indiscretions. Some of these former "experimenters" even pontificate very loudly against drug use. They wear their post-college abstinence with overwhelming smugness and probably add it to their resumes. My fellow chocolate addicts and I don't have that luxury.

Chocolate use has never had the same sheik as pot or similar drugs. Sure, you could get a high from it, but there were side effects. Pot might damage the lungs or impair the brain, but you don't see the lungs or brain when you're out partying your fool head off. Chocolate, on the other hand, is known for the visible havoc it can cause: to the complexion and to the teeth if they're not brushed regularly. And often when one has an addiction, personal hygiene takes a back seat. Only hard core users will suffer with the visible manifestations of such usage. Pot smokers can/could deny usage with a straight face. Chocolate abusers aren't/weren't able to pull that off.

Citing the college "experience" for their drug use offers some people cover today. Not in my case. I remember my college days sneaking behind the old Humanities Building at S.D.S. (no U back then) to take a hit or two of Hershey. I and a small group of fellow substance abusers would huddle on the steps munching away, getting turned on. We were in the unusual situation of being caught between hip marijuana aficionados and straight-laced, no-mood-altering-drug groupies. We didn't fit in and we couldn't really share our euphoria with either group. The more we munched-up, the more we were shunned by both. And we always had to watch out for the cops. The cops would just as soon bust us as look at us. And we knew that the chocolate they'd confiscate would never be seen again.

Now that the effects of a good chocolate high are being publicly shared for the first time by scientists, those of us who've known the true power of mood-altering chocolate can come out in the open. The relief of not having to sneak around anymore or worrying about tell-tale brown stains around the mouth is truly joyous. No more hidden stash melted in a backpack. No longer will I have to drive to another town to get my chocolate fixes or fear seeing a guilt-ridden photo of me in the local press blaring my secret to all. Now I can openly offer to share a Snickers Bar with someone. It's as if a huge stone has been lifted from my shoulders.

Unlike those others who have admitted to mood altering "experiments" while in college, but remain fuzzy in the present, I'm simply going to say that I'm not going to minimize my so-called transgressions or rant on about how I've learned my lesson and what a good person I am now. Nope. I'm going to go out do it again. I'm going to indulge in a mood altering experience yet one more time. And I'm not going to make any excuses about it either.

I'm off to my local Vons. I'm going to buy two Hershey bars with almonds. And when I get home, I'm going to ingest them both in one sitting. Wow, I'm getting a little high just thinking about it.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

These days, I find myself desperately seeking relief from the soul-deadening effects of writing about election year politics. Besides being infuriatingly repetitious, election analysis this early in the campaign, serves little constructive purpose.

And so, I do what I always do under such circumstances ... I seek the back pages of my Sunday Union-Tribune for tidbits which reflect the real human condition. Of course, I found them.

Page A-11 relates a mass demonstration in Toulouse, France, over a town edict banning all begging and lying around uselessly. Seems the town fathers, facing a situation similar to that of San Diego hosting the GOP Convention, tried to get rid of all of the unwanted in advance of the tourist season. While authorities suggest that the number of the unwashed was simply too large, protesters suggested that it was instead an attack upon the town's "hippies." I always wondered as to where America's hippies disappeared.

Page 14 notes that the Nicaraguan Sandinistas have now abandoned their long held anthem calling for them to fight to the death against Yankee imperialism. Of course, it's election time there too, and their candidate is gaining ground and desperate to shed the old pro-Marxist image. As a result, they have adopted Beethoven's "Ode to Joy" from his Ninth Symphony with new lyrics about "peace and brotherhood." That sounds okay, but I'm certainly going to miss that good old familiar "Yankee go home" of bygone days.

And on page A-24 a final item from Fun City, aka The Big Apple, aka New York. Apparently an elderly tourist from Finland had the misfortune to collapse with a heart attack on a New York City sidewalk. As she lay there, unconscious, a group of concerned citizens gathered around her to help. While waiting for the ambulance to come, one of the onlookers, obviously deeply worried over the potential swelling of her fingers, relieved her of a 1.5 carat diamond ring and took off.

The lady is, fortunately, recovering at a local hospital, but minus her diamond. I guess there is just no end to the helpfulness of folks in the big city.

Reel Thoughts

'Bulletproof' hits bullseye for action, comedy

by Betty Jo Tucker

If a friend is someone who knows all your faults and likes you just the same, then undercover cop Rock Keats (Damon Wayans) can be viewed as a friend to petty crook Archie Moses (Adam Sandler) in Universal's "Bulletproof." In spite of Moses' criminal tendencies, Keats can't help feeling protective of him.

At the beginning of this new action/comedy, Moses doesn't know that Keats is a cop. Discovering this secret during a drug deal gone sour, he starts to believe that with friends like Keats, he doesn't need enemies. Moses doesn't know that Keats has tried his best to protect him while carrying out his undercover assignment. During the drug bust confusion, Moses accidentally shoots Keats, who doesn't realize the shooting was not on purpose.

Rebuilding a friendship destroyed by betrayal and misunderstandings forms the major theme of "Bulletproof." This may sound like pretty serious stuff, but Wayans and Sandler, both "Saturday Night Live" veterans, put a humorous spin on almost every scene.

Wayans ("Celtic Pride"), a commanding screen presence, creates a character much more sympathetic than his ballooning boxer in "The Great White Hope." Sandler ("Happy Gilmore") surprises everyone with a rather disciplined, almost low-key, comic performance. A spirited verbal sparring between these two main characters gives "Bulletproof" its amusing edge. When his gangster cronies (led by James Caan, who else?) show distrust for Keats, Moses says to Keats, "what is it about you? No-body likes you except me." Later, Moses forces Keats to phone his mother so that she will keep thinking the two men are still best friends. Wayans is excellent in this particular scene as he reluctantly cajoles and sweet-talks a woman whose son he has betrayed, just by doing his job.

Some of the funniest scenes in "Bulletproof" include Wayans and Sandler tricking a policeman by telling him they are going to Disneyland, Sandler singing "I Will Always Love You" in a sleazy motel shower, and a crazy car chase led by the macho-latent motel owner.

In the midst of all this action and laughter, a visually stunning shot surprisingly appears on screen. It shows an airplane taking off over a field of gorgeous golden sunflowers. (Kudos to director Ernest Dickerson, a former cinematographer, and to Steven Bernstein, director of photography.) But keep your eyes open and pay close attention. This beauty only lasts for a second.

"Bulletproof" flirts dangerously with pornography in some scenes and may be too raunchy for many viewers. However, for shock-proof action movie fans, this exciting film delivers bang-up entertainment.

Letters to the Editor

Taking advantage of the system?

It only takes three Steve Baldwins to clog more mail slots than all of California's Assembly Democrats combined!

I am a government waste analyst and I assure you that Baldwin is clearly one of the top abusers of mass mailing perks at public expense. This junk-mail junkie is openly flaunting California's simple junk-mail law which reads: "No news letter or other mass mailing shall be sent at public expense."

Baldwin's abuse of the franking privileges of office has resulted in a flood of paper pouring into his district on almost a weekly basis.

Because he never gives that taxpayer financed postage meter of his a rest, trees are getting axed right and left to feed that over-heated government printing press.

ELIZABETH A. MEYERS

San Diego

Meyers is the Libertarian candidate opposing Baldwin in the 77th Assembly District.

Actions speak louder than words

Steve Baldwin ranks among the Assembly's dirty dozen of top political junk mail spenders who most badly abused the power of incumbency.

This price of pork engaged in a mass mail spending spree last year that deluged his district with so much political junk mail that it would be fitting to erect a Baldwin Tree Memorial.

It would only take three Steve Baldwins to clutter up more mailboxes with political junk mail at taxpayer expense than ALL California's Democrats combined!

Many of Baldwin's badly self-promotional mailers are highly political in tone. One piece - that only circulated in a Filipino section of his district - proclaimed a special week for Filipino veterans. Not only does that have no discernable legislative purpose, but it involves shameful racial pandering as well.

Furthermore, this out of control spending comes on top of pay raises recently showered on staffers that nicked the taxpayers to the tune of an extra $2.6 million per year. Baldwin's group dares to call itself "Taxfighters for Baldwin." But someone should take away his credit card.

Lamplighters presents 'Moon Over the Brewery'

September 12, 1996 THE LEMON GROVE REVIEW Page 5

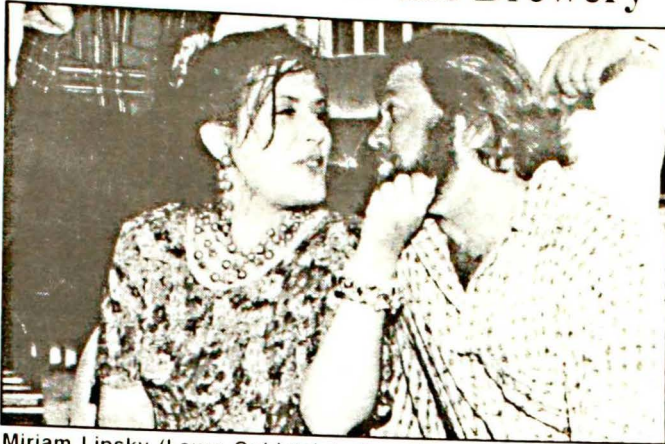

The Lamplighters Community Theatre presentation of "Moon Over the Brewery," a drama/comedy by Bruce Graham, will open tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Theatre, 8053 University Ave., La Mesa (next to the library).

Miriam Lipsky, unmarried and living with her thirteen year old daughter, Amanda, works as a waitress to pay the bills, but it is her painting that matters to her. Good subjects are scarce in the drab Pennsylvania coal town where they live, so Miriam dons a miner's lamp and paints at night, when moonlighting softens and transforms the stark landscape.

Miriam is also desirous of male companionship, a need which the precocious Amanda (she has an IQ of 160) has discouraged by driving away suitor after suitor with her barbed comments.

Amanda, compensating for the lack of a father, has created an imaginary friend, Randolph, who appears (only to her) in a resplendent white suit and provides mischievous advice and guidance.

Matters come to head when Miriam brings home Warren Zimmerman, a rather unprepossessing, somewhat paunchy mailman, who at first appears to be a perfect target for Amanda's (and Randolph's) caustic remarks and demeaning intelligence tests.

Miriam Lipsky (Laura Goldstein) gives Warren Zimmerman (Jim Robinson) a friendly tug in "Moon Over the Brewery."

Until, that is, he quietly but firmly beats Amanda at her own game. In fact, it is the surprisingly resourceful Warren who is able, at last, to wean Amanda away from her dependence on Randolph and into reality - and who, in time, may also be the one able to fill the aching needs of both Amanda and her lonely mother.

Directed by Bruce Ericson and produced by Gladys Roncey, the cast includes Melissa Cigamro, Laura Goldstein, Jim Robinson and Mike Siscoe.

"Moon Over The Brewery" will run weekends starting tomorrow and continuing through Oct. 13. Friday and Saturday performances begin at 8 p.m. Sunday matinees will be presented at 2 p.m. There will be one Thursday performance on Sept. 26.

In addition, a convenient (for audience members who do not wish to drive at night) matinee performance on Oct. 12 has been added.

Proceeds from this performance will further support the Cleo Anderberg Scholarship Fund. For further information about the scholarship fund, contact producer Gladys Roncey at 449-3100.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for senior citizens, students and active military. For information and reservations, call 464-4598.

Local rockers open Foghat show

by Joe Naiman

Ieri's Witch, a band formed when two friends from Valhalla High School got together with two other musicians, fulfilled one of its members' dreams Sept. 4 when they opened for Foghat at 4th and B.

Rod Price, the slide guitarist for Foghat, was the idol of Brett Ellis, the Ieri's Witch guitarist who now lives in El Cajon.

"It's the greatest gig in my life. It's the greatest gig so far," said Ellis after playing before a crowd of between 500 and 600.

The band's style was taken from its members' admiration for groups including Foghat and Led Zeppelin. Ieri's Witch played mostly original music at the concert, but they sang a cover of "Road Fever" as a tribute to Foghat and a cover of Janis Joplin's "Another Piece of My Heart."

"We recognize that it's difficult for people to listen for hours to original music, they don't know," said singer Stacey Adler, one of the Valhalla graduates on the band's decision to sing the Joplin cover. "It kind of helps ease the challenge of listening to original music."

Ieri's Witch played some music from their first album, "In for the Kill," plus additional music which may be on their next album. The group is expected to record the album around November.

Ellis said that he received a "Foghat Live" album for his birthday in April 1979, when he was in seventh grade. He also received the Led Zeppelin album "The Song Remains the Same." "Then I bought a guitar," said Ellis.

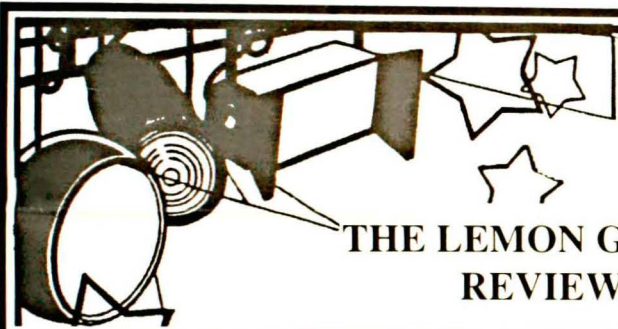

He also bought more Foghat music. "I went back and bought all their other albums after I heard the live album," said Ellis.

The performance was the second at 4th and B for Ieri's Witch. In June the group played there in a benefit for the Casa de Amparo shelter for battered women.

In the past Ieri's Witch has opened for groups including Molly Hatchet, Pat Travers, Peter Wolf (J. Geils Band), and Rick Derringer. They also performed at Sammy Hagar's birthday party in Cabo San Lucas last year, and next month will be opening for Hagar three nights at his Cabo Wabo club. The band is also being considered to open for Ronnie James Dio.

In addition to Ellis, Adler and Varela, the band includes drummer Mike McFarland of Ocean Beach.

Fishing in the middle of town

by Mistie Shaw

Teaching a youngster the finer points of fishing can be a difficult chore. Not that fishing is such a tough thing to do, but when one has a line out that keeps getting nibbles it's difficult to turn from the chase to bait hooks, untangle lines, free snags or cast "far out" for a child. However, there is one place where it's much easier to keep a kid the center of attention. Anyone that has reached the old age of 16 is no longer allowed to fish at Chollas Lake but they are allowed to help someone younger.

About 50 years ago, what is now Chollas Lake was the first reservoir in San Diego. No longer used to store water for human consumption, now the lake is a park that caters to young fisherfolk, joggers, and nature lovers. A nature trail winds across the top of the park ending at a cactus garden. Joggers enjoy the scenic setting, rolling hills and mostly shaded path. Young people who want to fish need no permits or licenses.

Throughout the years Chollas Park has expanded the choices available to visitors. Today a blacktopped jogging path circles the lake and, if followed below the dam and all the way around, is exactly one mile long. Six canoes are available, at no charge, to organizations who meet liability insurance requirements and have adults competent to supervise their use. Cane poles may be borrowed by unprepared fishermen while playground equipment beckons those with shorter attention spans. More than a hundred ducks and geese beg for handouts but usually stay just out of reach. One key ingredient - most parents will agree - of any family outing is the availability of bathrooms. They are at the end of the parking lot which can be a long walk when one is at the other end of the lake and in a hurry, but at least they are there.

During cold weather months, the pond is usually stocked with trout. But Blue Gill provide most of the action with an occasional trout, bass or catfish for variety. Once a month, a free fishing clinic is held. Fishing tackle and bait are provided and staff member, Bill

Roder patiently tries to instill a love for the sport from 11 - 2 pm. The next clinic will be held Sept. 21. An archery range is expected to open by the end of the year.

One of my favorite pictures was taken 16 summers ago at Chollas Lake. It shows a 4-year-old tow-head with a grin about as big as the single fish on his stringer. Never-mind the hours that he waited, playing in the dirt next to his "resting" pole, the hundreds of practice casts that went plop six inches from the shoreline. At last, he was a successful fisherman!

Chollas Lake Park is right off Highway 94, northwest of Market-place at the Grove. Hours vary according to the time of year. For more information (the phone number is not listed), call 527-7683.
